Delta and The Greenbrier Launch New, Daily, Year-Round Air Service

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, West Virginia (June 10, 2010) – Daily, nonstop air service to Greenbrier Valley Airport from Atlanta and New York's LaGuardia takes off today, launching year-round flights from two of the nation's largest cities to The Greenbrier on Delta Air Lines. Jim Justice, chairman and owner of The Greenbrier, Governor Joe Manchin III, Senator Jesse Guills and Betty Crookshanks, president of the Greenbrier County Commission along with numerous local business and political leaders were present at the airport to celebrate the first flight and welcome passengers. Justice was instrumental in bringing the flights to Greenbrier Valley to facilitate travel to the luxury resort and to support the region's economic growth.

"Our agreement with Delta Air Lines brings a level of travel convenience to The Greenbrier previously unseen," said Jim Justice, chairman and owner of The Greenbrier. "These flights make it easier for people across the United States and Europe to visit. There is so much excitement now, with our new entertainment complex, restaurants and upscale retail boutiques, and of course, The Greenbrier Classic."

The new flights will utilize the CRJ-200 aircraft, a 50-seat regional jet, and shuttle passengers on the approximately hour and a half flight from both destinations. The flight schedule will be:

"I commend the Greenbrier County state and local officials, Jim Justice and Delta Air Lines for their partnership to bring this new air travel service to fruition," said Gov. Manchin. "Air travel is one of the most convenient and key resources that will help sustain economic activity and tourism in the Greenbrier Valley region and across the entire Mountain State. This new air service will also be an asset to The Greenbrier, as it prepares to play host to one of the most anticipated golf competitions in our state's history."

Delta's base in Atlanta is the largest global airline hub with daily flights connecting to cities across the U.S. and throughout the world. New York is the nation's top travel market, with LaGuardia as the market's preferred airport for travel to and from Manhattan. Last year, the airport welcomed more than 23 million travelers.
